“Dr. Francis Collins has been a champion for science and research. His tireless work and advocacy have been critical in making the case for continued U.S. leadership in biomedical research and helping everyone appreciate how these investments make a difference in families’ lives. Over the course of his time leading the National Institutes of Health, our researchers have made groundbreaking discoveries that have raised exciting new research questions, offered new hope for cures and treatments, and saved countless lives. I’m grateful to Director Collins for his years of dedicated leadership at the National Institutes of Health and service to the American people.”
